YALE AND ARMY BOTH STRONG ON DEFENSIVE WORK

Blues' Offensive Play Is Not Perfect Yet—Cadets at Critical Moments Developed Amazing Defense.

EDGREN'S COLUMN

YALE and West Point played a smashing game Saturday. It was a rough game, not because of any unfriendly spirit between the teams...

Erwin of West Point, was the hero of the game. He is left guard, but he is all over the field like an end. He is a remarkably swift runner and has a knack of being always in the right place at the right time.

The scattered Army team was frantically rushing back to cross his path when suddenly "Red" Erwin came through the ruck, hovered for a moment outside the interference, and with an eagle-like twist of his body, shot down and pinned Jones about the thighs, pulling him down. It was a beautiful piece of work. A tackle like that is only seen in the twinkling of an eye, but it could be duplicated in any way it pleased the trainer for football players to study. It is no light thing to come up on a man like that from underneath.
